

Dear Mike,

Did you know that 15-20% of any population is neurodivergent? Neurodiversity is an umbrella term for those who are dyslexic, have ADHD, and/or autism.

Due to the immense popularity of our in-person training sessions we invite everyone to check out our latest unit 'Neurodiversity in the workplace'. This training is great for any organisation. The sessions are approximately 1.5 hours long and great for groups of up to 25 participants, check out more information here and if you enquire today you get a FREE interview or meetings communications guide.

Ever wondered how job coaching actually works? In this months newsletter we unpack how our neuro-inclusion specialists or job coaches work with managers and employees to drive the right outcomes for business.

All the very best,

Bodo Mann - Chief Executive Officer & Managing Director - Australia & Aotearoa

Neurodiversity in the workplace

This in person training program has been designed to help managers and teams have more confident conversations about neurodiversity in the workplace.

The focus of this training is on promoting the strengths of autism and neurodivergent conditions in the workplace and equipping organisations with the tools they need to ensure neurodivergent people can flourish at work.

What's Job Coaching and why is it important?

At auticon, each of our autistic IT and data consultants have access to the ongoing support of a job coach or neuro inclusion specialist to support their employment with us.

Many consultants say that having the support of their coach is something they most value about working at auticon. Coaching is a vital tool they can use to successfully navigate a workplace that at times may not always be so straight forward.

Why hire autistic talent?

As an award-winning technology consultancy, auticon recognises that adults on the autism spectrum find it difficult to secure or maintain employment.

To help them succeed, auticon pairs our technology consultants with job coaches who provide a compassionate management style. Likewise, we act as a catalyst for wider change in the organisation by integrating autistic colleagues into existing workplaces.
