Neurodiversity

An online resource to extend your personal knowledge

'I am currently doing your online training – Dialing Up Dialing Down and finding it life changing – for myself, my whānau, and for the students in our school'

"I slowly chipped away at watching the webinars, and I need to say I was blown away. This has by far been the most in-depth and informative series of webinars that I have actively engaged in"

'That was incredible. Lots of people are texting me how powerful it was. Thank you for allowing me to be part of such a beautiful experience.'

'I can't tell you what a life-changing turning point last night was for me. You told me my life story in the "Sensory-Seeker" part of the workshop. And I have left whakamāpapa – the land of shame – as a result.'

-- Feedback from our recent workshops

We understand that as the year gets busier, things can more intense for those who identify as takiwātanga, aroreretini, kura urupare, neurodiversity - It can also become intense for the people around them.

We offer two accessible online versions of our workshops, suitable for all.

One offer is an online webinar; a filmed Mind Over Manner workshop, that you can watch and learn from in your own time and space.

Our second offer is an online workshop over Zoom with our Facilitator Susan Haldane over the course of 2.5 hours.

Both options are incredibly insightful and useful for educators and learning support at any point in the year.

If you're an educator, you also have the option of booking a live workshop with our Facilitator Susan Haldane at your school!

Online Neurodiversity Training

About

Mind Over Manner uses the power of theatre to provide insight and understanding of the neurodivergent experience, bringing new perspectives and reframing our responses to what can often be judged as a 'behaviour issue'

These workshops are for all of those people who may be neurodivergent, or those who are living with, working alongside or supporting a neurodivergent person.

New Offer

Mind Over Manner are now offering two easy options to access the necessary knowledge for creating positive relationships and to realise the potential of every person who may be neurodivergent.

Our 2.5 hour Online Workshop is lead by Facilitator Susan Haldane and uses filmed footage to educate comprehensively. This can also be done LIVE and in person.

Our Dialling Up, Dialling Down Webinar series is an individual course to be experienced in your own time and space. This consists of 5 x 1.5 hour long filmed learning sessions.
