

Research Project: Whānau of Children with Feeding Challenges in Aotearoa

We are seeking to gather the thoughts and experiences of parents and whānau of children with feeding difficulties, in relation to the psychological and financial impacts that may be occurring for people in this situation.

We know from overseas research that there are numerous financial and psychological impacts that occur for families due to having a child with both short term and long-term feeding difficulties. There is no data currently available to show the impacts facing parents and whanau of children with these difficulties who reside in New Zealand.
